

MAKE A WUNDROUS SOCIETY PIN

A man appeared in the doorway, silhouetted by light. He was tall and slender with wide shoulders. His face was half obscured by a thick woollen scarf, and the remaining half was made of freckles, watchful blue eyes and a long, broad nose.

All six-plus feet of him were decked out in a long blue coat over a slim suit with mother-of-pearl buttons – stylish but slightly askew, as if he'd just come from a formal event and was in the process of undressing on his way home. Pinned to the lapel of his coat was a small golden W.

'It isn't really like a normal school. Scholars in the Wondrous Society are never coddled. People think Society members are given a free ride, that once you get this little golden pin' – he tapped the W on his lapel – 'the world will smooth itself out for you, and your path will always be free and easy. And they're sort of right – the old gold spikes certainly open doors. Respect, adventure, fame. Reserved seats on the Wunderground. Pin privilege, people call it.' He rolled his eyes. 'But within Society walls you're expected to earn that privilege. Not just in the trials, not just once, but over and over again, for the rest of your life, by proving that you're worthy of it. Proving you're special.'
